Information & Application

The Trail...

The Finger Lakes Beer Trail promotes the growing craft brewing industry in the Finger Lakes, showcasing the region's microbreweries and brew pubs. The trail is comprised of over 100 craft brewers spanning roughly 210 miles across the central part of New York State from Rochester to Syracuse down to the Corning and Binghamton areas, resulting in a trail overflowing with natural beauty along which tourists and beer aficionados alike can enjoy an abundance of delicious locally brewed beers.

Promoting Beer Tourism...

With the craft beer industry growing at incredible rates, the desire to travel and discover another tasty brew has created an emerging market trend in tourism - Beer Tourism. Simply put, beer tourism represents the growing interest in craft beer – or “microbrews” – and the willingness to travel great distances to sample dozens of brews, meet the brewers, and learn how they turn grain, yeast and water into tasty regional suds.

The mission of the Finger Lakes Beer Trail is to increase the visibility and reputation of the region's craft brewing industry, and in doing so, attract more beer-loving tourists to the Finger Lakes Region.

Proven Exposure...

The Finger Lakes Beer Trail has established itself as a proven marketing and promotion vehicle for the region's craft brewing industry and the microbreweries that comprise the trail. The Trail has been featured in hundreds of television features (both local and non-local), radio programs, and local, regional, and national newspaper and magazine articles. Most notably the Finger Lakes Beer Trail has been featured in the The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, Beer Advocate magazine, Chilled magazine, Yahoo! Travel, BBC Travel, the New York Daily News, and the Philadelphia Daily News.

In a September 2015 travel article, The New York Times stated that the Finger Lakes region “has long been a top destination for wine lovers, but the region is quickly becoming a haven for beer drinkers as well. It is home to 70 breweries, according to Finger Lakes Beer Trail, a local trade group, up from just 24 in 2011. Twelve more are scheduled to open in the next few months.” (note: the number of breweries along the trail today is over 100). Beer Advocate magazine, which has a monthly readership of over 150,000, featured the Finger Lakes Beer Trail as a craft beer tourism destination alongside Portland, Maine; Grand Rapids, Michigan; and Atlanta, Georgia in its September 2014 issue. In October 2014, The Wall Street Journal featured the Finger Lakes Beer Trail as one of “six road trips for foodies” alongside the Kentucky Bourbon Trail, the Hoosier Pie Trail, the New Hampshire Ice Cream Trail, and others.

And, in December 2015, the Wall Street Journal featured the Finger Lakes Beer Trail in an article about the growth of small-scale craft beverage producers in New York State. Joe Sixpack (aka Don Russell), weekly beer columnist for the Philadelphia Daily News, has written a number of articles about the Finger Lakes Beer Trail and lists it on his website as a recommended beer tourism destination.

Increased Visibility for your Business...

In response to a growing interest from transportation providers, we are pleased to offer an Transportation Membership category featuring a competitive pricing structure with numerous value-added benefits.

The core means of marketing the Finger Lakes Beer Trail are:

- A rich and dynamic website that makes it easy for tourists to plan and map their excursions, featuring a location directory, travel information, suggested day trip itineraries, package deals, and calendar plug-in of brewery and craft beer related events imported from Facebook.
- An annual full-color print Trail map strategically placed in various tourist locations and visitors centers throughout the Finger Lakes, surrounding regions, and northeastern United States.
- Promotion of brewery news and events via major social media outlets such as Facebook and Twitter. Events are also pulled into the FLBT website via a calendar plug-in feature.
